

OPERATION TITAN

German Briefing

General situation report:

In the aftermath of the Battle of Stalingrad you have been forced to withdraw westward into new defensive positions. The Soviet forces facing you are part of the Front that surrounded and destroyed 6th Army at Stalingrad, and it is believed that they were seriously weakened during the battle. It is expected that they will mount an all-out attack on your front-line positions in the very near future.

Situation Map:

Orders:

Using the forces at your disposal you are to:

1. Hold your front-line positions
2. Destroy any Soviet attacks
3. Ensure that no enemy troops threaten the occupied city of Norwosygorsk

Forces:

You have the following forces at your disposal:

Both the 384th and 389th Infantry Divisions have been raised to replace formations with the same designations that were destroyed during the Battle of Stalingrad. They were rebuilt around a core of battle-hardened troops but most of the units comprise newly recruited troops who have not yet been in battle. The 15th Luftwaffe Field Division is a poorly equipped and under strength formation suitable for lines-of-communication duties, anti-partisan operations, or holding front-line positions in areas where there is little likelihood of a major attack.

Your troops have built a series of defensive positions that are protected by minefields.

Enemy intentions and forces:

It is understood that the Soviet forces facing you are mostly new recruits brought in to replace the massive losses suffered during the battles around Stalingrad. They will be inexperienced but also very aggressive, and you can expect that they will fight to the last man. Intelligence indicates that the troops facing you include the following units:
